The pending Congressional amendments to the "Piracy Prohibition Act" has an amendment offered which will extend protection to certain types of apparel designs; fabric designs; and fashion designs. This extension will cover men's clothing; women and children's clothing; and includes undergarments, outerwear, gloves, hats, footwear; headgear; handbags; purses; totes and belts. This new regulation in the market will allow designers to have exclusive copyright and have the means to protect their intellectual property rights. The new law if passed will have a three year provision for the owner of the design to enjoy exclusive rights over it with the means to obtain fines up to $250,000 for infringement.The Vintage knit and crochet designs from Coats and Clark and many other sources may be up for grabs. These old pattern books have distinctive designs which associate them with the era in which they were worn. Collecting these now and obtaining a copyright for them may be a way to preserve the designs as well as bring them back to market. The orphaned copyright law would apply to written copyrights; and we already know that most copyrights for books are abandoned in the market after 10 years or less. If you are a design entrepreneur- with a love of vintage fashion- I would recommend you snatch up all these old design books. When the new law takes effect they will be worth their weight in gold!!!
